

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A method and apparatus for cutting thick sections of cement-based materials, the method comprising mutually traversing a surface to be cut with a laser beam at a power density sufficient to produce a depth of molten material having a maximum depth of 10 mm at each traverse; allowing the molten material to solidify; breaking the solidified material into particles; and removing the particles by suction means.